Falix quem faciunt alieni Cornua cautum.

OLD SCHOOL-FELLOW,

THE firſt Object that ſtruck my Eye, as I was going out, this Morning, to the Coffee-Houſe, was the buxom young Wife of a mighty honeſt, good-natured Neighbour of mine, ſtepping briskly into a Hack, and, as ſaid the By-Standers, bound to Horn-Fair. The Sight of her new green Silk Stockings, the Day, the Place ſhe was going to, the Recollection of certain Paſſages I had heard whiſpered, together with the paſſive Character, nay, the very Looks of my well-meaning Neighbour, all contributed to bring into my Head a merry little Story I have long had by me, and which my French Author avers to be no other than real Fact: But that, you know, I am not to be anſwerable for. In I went again, ſat me down, turned it into Engliſh, with a Deſign of ſending it to the Grubeans, who, doubtleſs, would have improved the Hint, and made excellent Uſe of it. But calling to Mind, that an old Acquaintance ought always to be preferred to Strangers, I here ſend you my Tale, to uſe, if you like it. Tho', by what you tell us in your laſt Week's Preamble, you ſeem to decline touching upon any Thing that may expoſe the Sex's Frailties, leſt your Female Readers ſhould be diſobliged. But, believe me, my Friend, in all that you judge very wrongly: For even your beauteous CLOE herſelf (allowing the Lady to be Miſtreſs of all the Vertues, Graces and Perfections you beſtow on her) nor any other vertuous Woman breathing, can reaſonably take amiſs to be told, that there are bad Women in the World; when their Eyes muſt daily convince them, that too too many (both of their own Sex and of ours) are no better than perfect Scandals to Human Species. No; it is only on the Cheeks of the Guilty, when they ſee their own Pictures drawn in lively Colours, that any Narrative of that Kind can raiſe a conſcious Bluſh; and ſome we well know, are paſt bluſhing at all. Aſſure yourſelf, therefore, that whoever counſels you to be ſo very nicely ſcrupulous, that Way, is not your Friend. And I dare engage, you may give a thouſand Stories of Gallantry, &c. (but, as you juſtly obſerve, carefully wrapped up in the cleaneſt Linnen) without ever diſobliging or affronting any one of your Female Cuſtomers; eſpecially thoſe who have never put it in the Power of wicked Man to ſay; Woman, black is thine Eye. To theſe it will rather be a Satisfaction; as they will have room to hug themſelves on account of their ſuperior Continency. Suppoſing you now begin to be of my Opinion, as to this Point, I proceed to my little Hiſtory.

A youthful, amorous Sovereign Prince, ſomewhere in Germany, walking one Day in his Palace Garden, with ſome Attendants, and ſeemingly in a muſing Humour, turned about ſuddenly, and looking around, inquired, "What was become of Theagenes?" This Nobleman was his chief Favourite, and the only Confident of his Amours. Philemon, a young Cavalier, more ſollicitous than any of the other Courtiers to pay his Compliments to the riſing Sun, officiouſly ran to ſeek him; nor could he forbear fancying but that his Highneſs had, by his Looks, peculiarly directed him ſo to do. Theagenes's Garden Back-Gate was very near his Maſter's Palace; whereas the Fore-Gate was in a diſtant Street: But as Philemon was pretty well acquainted with both Avenues, having been frequently on ſuch Errands, he choſe the neareſt Way, and found Entrance without either knocking or ringing, the Gate being only put-to. Entering the Garden, without meeting with any of the Servants to inquire of, he paſſed on directly to the Pleaſure-Houſe. Finding all quiet below, up-Stairs he went to look in the Upper-Apartments: but found all faſt. However imagiuing he heard ſome Sort of a Buſtle, and even ſomething like Voices, he knocked ſeveral Times; but none either appeared or anſwered. Upon this his Curioſity incited him to peep thro' the Key-hole, and thence he plainly diſcovered the Favourite (whom he knew perfectly well by his Embroidery) who was cloſely embracing, kiſſing and careſſing a Lady, of whom he could ſee nothing but the Legs, on which ſhe had fine green Silk Stockings, and yellow Garters, with long Silver Taſſels, as it ſeems was then the Faſhion. Philemon rightly judged it would be to little Purpoſe to wait there any longer to ſpeak with Theagenes, then ſo buſy; and ſo returned to the Palace, determined to tell his Highneſs, that he could not find Theagenes. He did tell him ſo indeed; but in ſuch a Way as gave room for a Suſpicion of ſome Myſtery in his mentioning the Name of that Favourite, which he could not do without laughing. His Highneſs would needs know the Meaning of all that, and required it very earneſtly. His Longing was ſoon ſatisfied; for Sovereigns are not to be held in Suſpenſe: So Philemon imparted to him all he had beheld. One would have imagined, that the Recital of ſo pleaſant a Scene might have diverted this gallant young Prince: Whereas, on the contrary, it caſt him into a profound Thoughtfulneſs. This made Philemon highly condemn his own Weakneſs in divulging what he perceived gave his Sovereign ſuch ſeeming Uneaſineſs; and might be prejudicial to his Patron Theagenes, on whoſe Favour he himſelf had no ſmall Dependance. The Prince had a ſtrong Inclination to a young Beauty of his Court, and now began to harbour a vehement Suſpicion that his Favourite and Confident was his Rival. He aſked Philemon: "If he "ſhould know the Lady he had ſeen, by her Legs, if he "ſaw them again?" In the Confuſion and Concern this officious Courtier then was, he made a ſecond unlucky Blunder, by anſwering boldly in the Affirmative. "Very "well then, returned the impatient Prince: If ſhe belongs "to my Court, I will know who ſhe is before I am many "Hours older." With this he immediately went to the Apartment of the Princeſs his Conſort, deſiring her to ſummon to Court all her Ladies. You muſt know that this was done by a particular Bell: And the Prince had another to call together all his Courtiers. You may aſk; "Why "that Bell was not rung to call the Favourite?" To which I may anſwer; "That his Highneſs wanted only him." The Ladies all arrived: When his Highneſs, ſeemingly in a jovial Humour, told them; "He was going to take a "Ride, and ſhould be obliged to them all for their Com-"pany." Moſt of them propoſed ſtepping Home again, to put on their Riding-Habits; which he would have been glad of, becauſe on thoſe Occaſions their Peticoats were ſhorter; but as he apprehended they might alſo change Stockings, he wholly declined the Motion; alledging that; "There was no Time to loſe." This Prince, naturally gallant, ſhewed himſelf more than uſually ſo at this Juncture; for the Horſes were no ſooner brought, but he would needs ſeat the Ladies on Horſeback; in doing which I preſume you readily gueſs at his Meaning. Philemon, having his Cue, ſtuck cloſe at his Maſter's Elbow: And the other Courtiers knew their Prince's Humour too well to offer at eaſing his Highneſs of the Task he had undertaken. The jealous Prince got Sight of abundance of pretty Legs, which at another Time would have pleaſed him wonderfully: But as they all were of the wrong Colour, he was very far from being eaſy or ſatisfied. He had got above half over his Scrutiny, and had gone thro' and thro' all the Diverſity of the Rain-bow; the right Colour alone excepted: When lifting up a young Lady, he beheld a Pair of the moſt beautiful Legs in the Creation, and on them green Stockings. But how did his Heart throb when, looking in her Face, he found her to be his own individual Miſtreſs, on whoſe Account alone he had been giving himſelf all that Trouble! Ye Gods! What do "I ſee"! cried he. Philemon immediately went and whiſpered him in the Ear; "That the Stockings he ſaw were of a deeper "Green than thoſe on this Lady; nor were the Garters "the ſame." "Thou wouldſt abuſe me, cried the Prince "dolorouſly; and if I find no other green Stockings than "theſe, aſſure thy ſelf that thou ſhalt feel my Reſent-"ment." Tho' very ill able to ſtifle his riſing Paſſion, yet conſidering he muſt go thro' with what he had begun if he intended to have farther Satisfaction, he made a ſtrong Effort to reaſſume a pleaſant Countenance, and proceeded in ſeating the Ladies as before: But alas! no more green Stockings were to be met with, notwithſtanding both himſelf and Philemon, with all the Eyes they had, kept peering continually downwards. They were now arrived at the very laſt, and upon her Saddle the Prince hoiſted her, with a heavy Heart. On Sight of this laſt Damſel's Legs, the vigilant Philemon, in a perfect Rapture, at finding it in his Power to eaſe his gracious Sovereign from all his racking Anxieties, gave him the agreed-on Gripe, by Way of Signal; and ſtill farther to convince his Highneſs, ſpoke in his Ear, yet loud enough to be underſtood by moſt of the Aſſembly, which we may impute to the Exceſs of his loyal Extaſy; "The ſame! The ſame! The very ſame, my "Lord! Stockings, Garters and all, my good Liege! I "aſſure you upon my Conſcience!" I already told you, that they had hitherto kept looking downwards; but now, having met with what they had been ſeeking for, they at once looked upwards. What ſhall I tell you! I imagine you grow impatient. Who think you this Lady was? Why; no other than Philemon's own Spouſe, I aſſure you! To go about deſcribing to you, how Thunder-ſtruck this officious Cornuto was, will certainly be very needleſs; and beſides I muſt make it out of my own Head if I do; for my Author ſays not a Word about it, tho' he had ſo ſpacious a Field for fine Inventions. What he really does ſay, on the Subject, amounts to only this: That the Prince appeared as full of Aſtoniſhment as the Husband; yet could not refrain from Smiling: And that poor Philemon looked as much like a Cuckold as any he (this Author) ever beheld during the whole Courſe of his Life, moſt Part whereof (if I am not miſinformed) he paſſed in Paris; which Metropolitan City may, in many reſpects, be paralleled with our own renowned Metropolis London; we will, therefore, for Sake's Sake, imagine M. Philemon to have put on as Cuckoldly a Countenance, then and for ever after, as is worn by any who land this Day at Cuckolds-Point, or as any of thoſe one may meet with, either on the River Thames in Barges, or off the River making good Chear in our City-Halls, or elſewhere, on the approaching Lord-Mayor's-Day.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

ABOUT the Middle of laſt Week, in one of our Daily Papers, you, doubtleſs, obſerved the following Paragraph: Viz. "Yeſterday, a Free and Accepted Maſon went "before Sir Rich. Hopkins, and produced a Copy, contain-"ing the whole Secrets of Maſonry, in its ſeveral Degrees, "to which he made Oath as to its Veracity; and we hear "it will be publiſhed in a few Days, with the Affidavit "annexed to it, for the Information of the Public."—Now, this being in a Paper which has already made ſo mighty a Noiſe and Buſtle about Maſonry, and one of whoſe Leading Members is well known to be a notorious Gormogon, we might reaſonably enough have ſuſpected the Veracity of the whole, had not the Name of a Perſon of ſuch Worth been ſo glaringly made Uſe of. However, on finding the Matter ſo atteſted, I really expected, that, now in Earneſt, this grand Myſtery muſt come to Light, and in a better Light than, for ought I can gather, it has been put by any Thing thoſe Anti-Maſonians have hitherto exhibited; and whoſe Virulency ſhews itſelf ſufficiently in their Witticiſm of their being glad to find nothing greatly indecent in Maſonry: Which, by the Bye, is not a very decent Expreſſion, conſidering how many of the Prime Nobility and Gentry of the Realm are Maſons, and moſt of them Perſons whoſe well-known Characters more than ſufficiently ſcreen them from ones even ſurmiſing, that they would condeſcend to countenance what is any Way indecent; ſtill ſuppoſing the whole to be only a Whim, as, to give my own private Sentiments, I take it for little other; nay, and (as to any important Secret) much of a Piece with a Story I ſhall preſently relate. But I muſt firſt relate what is to me at preſent really a Myſtery. The Day after that Paragraph appeared, a Gentleman, who is a Free-Maſon, having, it ſeems, been publicly taxed (and, as they call it, handſomely roaſted) with being the Party who made the ſaid Affidavit, before Sir Rich. Hopkins, went to ſeveral Proprietors of News-Papers, with an Advertiſement, ſigned D. T. abſolutely contradicting the Veracity thereof, as falſe, ſcandalous, and utterly groundleſs: Nor can I tell you the Reaſon why the ſame was not by any of them accepted. All this, I ſay is, as yet, to me a Myſtery. But with regard to any real, momentous Myſtery in either Maſonry, Gormogoniſm, Hummiſm, Cuzziſm, or any of the reſt of the multifarious Iſms we have among us, I verily take them all to be analogous with the wonderful Sight a certain comical Moor had to exhibit, a few Years ſince, at Grand-Cairo in Egypt, as I have been frequently aſſured by a Credit-worthy Eye-Witneſs.—This whimſical Cur, wanting to raiſe a little Caſh, was cracking his Brains to find out Ways and Means ſo to do; as you know abundance of good Chriſtians are daily and hourly doing, as well as this Muſſulman. Chance at length furniſhed him, very unexpectedly, with a ſure Expedient, which anſwered his Ends, even beyond Expectation: But there are Fools and Bubbles all the World over! With Joy he ſeized the Treaſure (at leaſt what he hoped would bring him Treaſure) which kind Fortune had thrown almoſt into his very Mouth, and Home he brought it. The Muſſulman's Grand Bairam [one of their two great annual Feſtivities] approached, at which Seaſons their Mobility divert themſelves, without one of the City Gates, much after the Manner as do ours in Smithfield, Southwark, &c. during thoſe reſpective Fairs. There our Drole pitched a cloſe Tent, at whoſe Entrance, aſſiſted by a Trumpeter, he bellowed out amain; Ajeyh; Ajeyh; Wonders! Wonders! This brought innumerable Crowds of curious People (as you know here, not long ago, Numbers flocked to ſee the Horſe with his Tail where his Head ſhould have been) and Thouſands waited round the Tent, with their Para's, or Pence, ready in Hand, to get Admittance on every Vacancy: And this held the whole Time of the Feſtival (which is never leſs than three Days, and occaſionally longer) to the no ſmall Benefit of this Wonder-Monger, all whoſe Cuſtomers came out bleſſing themſelves at the wonderful Sight they had beheld; all which, you may ſuppoſe ſtill increaſed the Eagerneſs and Impatience of all who had not gratified their Curioſity: And to own the Truth, what this Moor had to ſhew them was indiſputably wonderful in its Kind. He had his Wonder in a large Diſh, under a ſutable Cover, and over all, the more to honour his Gueſts, a coſtly embroidered Handkerchief. Now I doubt not but you grow impatient to learn, what this ſtrange Sight muſt be. Why, to let you at once into the Secret, as this Projector was ruminating how to get Money, he ſtepped aſide in the Fields to eaſe himſelf, and there blundered upon a monſtrous S—r R——ce, moſt apparently of Human Extract; which not only he, but all who ſaw it, with Admiration and Aſtoniſhment judged, that no Animal under the Elephant's Size could eaſily have voided an Excrement of ſuch enormous Dimenſions.

Now, as to any real Secret or Myſtery (worthy to be ſo termed) in any of the ſaid Myſterious Societies, I take them all to come far ſhort of the Wonder our Egyptian had to exhibit: Nay, and am very poſitive, that out of the many Hundreds of Maſons, within and without the three Kingdoms, four in five of them were made ſo either out of mere Curioſity, or with certain Views of partaking of the Loaves and Fiſhes of their Brethren. But ſtill I will aver, that were all the Rules and Injunctions of Free-Maſonry regularly and duely obſerved by that Fraternity (all which are too viſibly neglected and diſregarded) it would be altogether as rare to meet with a Brother of that Society labouring under any Difficulties, as it is to ſee a Jew or a Quaker begging about the Streets: And if the Maſons do but think fit to put in Execution what, to my own certain Knowledge, they for ſome Time have talked of, their Example would be worthy to be imitated by all Communities.——By inſerting this, you will highly oblige divers of your conſtant Readers. I am, &c. S.

P. S. I now no longer wonder, on what Account Mr. D. T. ſhould be deſirous of diſowning what, it ſeems, he had been wrongfully taxed with: I mean, being the Author of the ſtupid Thing which now appears, under Title of MASONRY DISSECTED, &c. If that be really the whole Myſtery of Maſonry, I hope all who peruſe that and this will allow me to have been pretty right in my Conjectures, and which you can teſtify was every Line of it ſet out before that egregious Piece of Traſh came abroad.

SATURDAY, October 17.

They aſſure us, that the 28th Inſt. is fixed for the Court's Removal from Richmond to St. James's.——Alſo, that the Day before the Court left Windſor, her Majeſty gave 80*l.* towards diſcharging the poor Debtors there confined.

From Cork, in Ireland, we learn, that one Crottey has Sentence of Death paſſed on him, for being concerned with Mr. Fra. Barry, late a Sub-Sheriff of that County, in running away with Mrs. Rachel Earbury, and forcing her to marry the ſaid Barry without her Conſent.

John Emerſon, who lately hanged himſelf in the Fleet Priſon, was Carpenter of his Majeſty's Ship Weymouth, a 4th Rate now at Plymouth, where the unhappy Man loſt his Wife and four Children.—— "This I the rather "take Notice of, becauſe a certain tender-hearted Citizen "ſaid, in my Hearing, that ſuch a Loſs would have made "him hang himſelf too."

MONDAY, October 19.

From good Hands we have it (tho' we at firſt took it for mere Grub-Street) that a very wicked Fellow has been actually in Southwark Jail, tho' ſince Bailed out, for a moſt unaccountable Supper he gave to four Journeymen Potters, at the Cock and Eagle Ale-Houſe in St. Thomas's Cloſe. This Varlet, who was Lamp-lighter, &c. to that Hoſpital, coming thither, towards Even. where thoſe Men were drinking, ſaid; "He had been eating ſome delicious Pork-"Stakes; and that if they would find Liquor, they ſhould be "very welcome to fare as he had done;" producing a Paper-full of raw Meat, which looked very inviting. This they agreed to willingly; and the Stakes being broiled, they eat heartily, with high Encomiums, at each Morſel, on the Goodneſs and Juicineſs of that excellent Pork. When the Reckoning was called for and paid by the four Potters, who ſpent 9*d.* each, he who had ſo well regaled them, with repeated Oaths and ſtill more authentic Tokens, which he had ready to ſhew, plainly convinced them; "That the "Pork they liked ſo well was no other than the Fleſh of "Street, one of the Malefactors, lately executed, whoſe "Body having been anatomized, he had (which was Part "of his Office to do) buried all the Fleſh, &c. excepting "what they had ſupped on." This ſtruck them with ſuch Horror, that they fell a vomiting in the utmoſt Agonies; and one named Johnſon, ſeemed in Danger of his Life: And what added ſtill more to their Abhorrence of that Canibal Food, was their being told, by ſome preſent; "That Street "was abominably tainted with that loathſome Diſtemper "the P——x!" We hear, that they all ſwear never to touch any more Pork, except what they ſee killed.

Extract of the Affidavit of Peter Harlee, late belonging to the Scooner William, of Boſton, in N. England. Taken before Rob. Cruikſhank, Benj. Peake, and Cap. Peter Jump: Chief Agents of the Royal African Company, at Cape-Coaſt Caſtle on the Gold-Coaſt of Africa.

May 31. About ſeven Leagues South from the Caſtle of El-Mino, the Negro Slaves roſe, killed the Maſter and eight Men, leaving alive only this Deponent and two Boys, of all the Crew. The Slaves ordered him to carry them to their own Country, allowing him only ſeven Days: But inſtead of ſteering to the Windward-Coaſt, this Deponent made little Sail in the Day-time, and drove all Night: And the better to accompliſh his Ends, he gave the commanding Negroes Opium in Wine and Water, which put them to ſleep. Arriving in Animabo Road, by Signs he made Capt. Chapman, of the Mary, ſenſible of his Diſtreſs; who engaged the Scooner, the Wind being likely to become calm, Capt. Chapman boarded her with armed Men in his Boats, and to his Aſſiſtance ſome other Ships in the Road ſent their Boats, alſo armed. In the Action, Capt. Chapman had two Men killed, and two wounded; alſo two Men belonging to the Mercury and Violet were killed. However, the Negroes were ſubdued, and Capt. Chapman appears to have been very careful, not only in preventing the Men belonging to the Briſtol Ships from plundering the Scooner, but alſo in preſerving the Effects of the Deceaſed, as well as the Cargo of Negroes; having weighed and taken into his Cuſtody ſome Gold, the Maſter's Books of Accounts, &c. 20 Negroe Boys, 11 Girls, five Women and ſeven Men; two of which laſt, being Ring-Leaders, were hanged, for an Example; two Men Slaves were found ſlain, on board the Scooner: Several others leaped over-board and probably were taken by the Negroes of Animabo, and the Villages adjacent. At the Deſire of Capt. Chapman, this Deponent went on-board all the Ships in Animabo Road, to ſee whether any of the Scooner's Slaves were got on-board them; and found as follows: Viz. on-board the Burroughs, five Men; on-board the Violet one Man and four Boys; on-board the Mercury one Man; on-board the Berley-Galley, 10 Boys, three Girls, four Women and one Man: N. B. All theſe four Ships are of Briſtol.

On the 14th they dropt another Letter, intimating their having been at the Place directed, expecting the Money, and that if he did not put it there that Night, not many Hours ſhould elapſe before their Threats ſhould be put in Execution. The Money was again depoſited, and remaining beyond the Time appointed, Mr. Boltley took it again. Two of the four Perſons apprehended on Suſpicion of being concerned in this Villany, (one of them named Power, and Uncle to Power who is in Newgate in that City on the ſame Affair) were ordered to Ivelcheſter Jail, and the other two to be continued in Bath Jail.
